IT'S TIME FOR ART

Oluwole Omofemi

Born in 1988 in Ibadan, Nigeria. Lives and works in Ibadan, Nigeria.

Leading the charge of contemporary African artists on the rise, Omofemi returns to New York, after a stellar year of sold out shows in Barcelona and New York respectively, strong secondary market auction results, and a historic commissioned painting of the late Queen Elizabeth II.

Omofemi's preferred muses; black women, are depicted with dark, midnight hue skin, etched with deep tribal marks, and are crowned with engulfing halo-esque afros, reminiscent of past martyrs of the black power movement that swept the global African diaspora.

The artist's overarching mission is to showcase afrocentric pride, which he maintains can only truly be championed through how black women view themselves and in turn are viewed by others.

For Omofemi, true liberty and emancipation for Africa and black people at large, can only be achieved once, black women are free to be their true selves and celebrated as they are.

Matthew Eguavoen

Born in 1988 in Edo State, Nigeria. Works and lives in Lagos, Nigeria.

2022 has been a breakout year for the rising Nigerian artist, with sold out shows in Barcelona, Paris, and New York, in addition to a strong reception in Hong Kong, London, Lagos and Chicago thus far.

Matthew's work is a strong visual social commentary on the socio-economic and political issues faced by the ordinary Nigerian and by extension the wider African citizen. He explores the impact of slavery on Africa and its diaspora, the extinction of traditional values, and the growing sensation and importation of religion, western morals and culture, in addition to the right of Africans abandoning the continent for relative greener pastures in western countries.

Mederic Turay

Born in 1979 in Abidjan, Ivory Coast. Lives and works in Marrakech, Morocco.

An archetypal Afro-politan and bon vivant, Turay's imposing abstract expressionist paintings belie narratives referenced by his international upbringing and experiences between Morocco, Ivory Coast and the United States, and represent his effort to distil the essence of the contemporary human experience in our transnational, post-colonial, global society.

Turay's practice transcends racial, geographic and socio-political notions, whilst still rooted in his identity and heritage through the utility of cultural motifs, chiefly ancestral masks and spiritual symbols.

Moses Zibor

Born in 1978, Nigerian/Ghanaian. Lives and works in Almaty, Kazakhstan.

Moses' otherworldly works enchants its viewers with its supernatural elements, and invites us to see beyond the natural and physical world, and step into the realms of the unseen and unknown. The overwhelming and profound nature of these dreams, the figment of a hyperactive imagination that has transcended and endured childhood, is evident in the recurring motifs of water in the artist's paintings.

Enchanting, mesmerising and mystical in composition, colour palette and style, Zibor's works are aesthetically complex as they are technically strong, portraying an artist who has not only mastered their craft over several years, but also thoroughly researched the themes, motifs and narratives that underpins their work.
